Gov. . Brownlow, after having fought Civil Rights and failed to get his party to support him for Congress, goes back to his first love and supports the only party that ever conceived the idea and solemnly endeavored to reduce it to practice. His last letter is one endorsing, in the broadest manner, Horace Maynard for the Governorslip of Tennessee. If there ever was a man who next to Sumner was tally the advocate of Civil Rights it is Maynord, and it is evident that Gov. Brownlow intends to held on to Maynard and radicalism even though they succeed in passing the bill. Has any one ever seen the democrat who stivocates it? Lives there a demograf who does not autagonize and and carse the measure? The meas cure was born and has had its growth inside the radical party. I sprang from the loins of radicalism and is the radical's own child. How in quitous and cowardly then is the cafort to deery that measure and y t vote the radical ticket! he had ginned his cotton, enquired how he stood financially, and offered to go home, get some seen cotton and self it for the purpose of raising some money for Rentro. Randolph here stopped him from talking, and as he rode off, called after him at d asked if his name was not Billy Hillman. He replied, "Yes, Billy Hillman is a nick name they call me." Randolph then said, "You are a prisoner." Hillman said, "Let me see your authority; read the warrant." Randolph said. "It don't make a damn bit of difference about that," Randolph did not read or even show a warrant, but put some paper into his pocket which he had in his hands and which he pever unfolded. Hillman was then handcuffed and chained to the wagon alongside of Childs. Hillman then told Randolph that his name was P. A. Hillman, not Wm. Hillman, but that he had a cousin named Wm. Hillman. Randolph replied, "It don't make a damn bit of difference we'il take you along and get him someother time." They were taken to Demopolis, put in a tent under a strong guard, still handcuffed and chained. The Sergeant told the sontinels that if they attempted to es cape to kill them if they could. At 9 o'clock that morning Williford and a Lieutenant scouled the county, evidently in search of arms and witnesses, and returned next morning with a rith and as not gun, belonging to some citizen or Belmont. Williford told Hillman the next morning that he Hillman) ought to feel good, because there was no evidence against him, as he had ferretted it all out. They were then marched under a strong guard of United States soldiers to the depot and put on the train for Selma, accompabreakfast for two, and all along the route, meals were sent for but two .-Upon reaching Selma they were marched to jail, and while on the way, they were grossly insulted by n groes, calling them God d-n Ku-Klux. and shouting for civil rights. They were kept in the jail of Selma for two hours and then marched to the Montgomery depot and put on the train for Montgomery. When they reached Benton, large crowd of negroes who had been attending a Radical meeting, were waiting at the depot. When the train stopped J. Q.
